The automobiles are all right. The grief is due to unmuffled drivers.

And old letters are not the worst. The files of the future will be full of films and dictagraph records.

Quantity of salve, properly and judiciously applied, will win the state intercollegiate field meets for Guthrie as a permanent asset.

The vaudeville stage fairly yearns for the Japanese woman who got $10,000 for breach of promise in the first suit of its kind in the Flowery Kingdom.

There be those who imagine the militia officer has a soft time. A casual glance at the schedule used in an officers' school of instruction will parol this imagery in a jiffy.

John Bull is flirting with real war when he holds up a ship containing forty-two women peace delegates from America. And he did well to let the ship go. Doubtless his ears burned hot enough as it was.

When a man has worked 37 minutes trying to get his stalled automobile going again, it pleases him beyond words to have his better-half ask from the back seat, "Do you think you could fix it. If you know what was the matter with it, dear?"

Would the abolition of sailor collars, lanyards and bell-bottomed trousers in the Navy promote efficiency, as a naval surgeon argues? It may be doubted. Jack is a conservative chap and he would not feed the a real sailor in strange togs. But if any change is to be made, Mr. Daniels will probably advocate pin-fanes.

THE "CABARET" FAD

One of the most conspicuous crazes of metropolitan city life for the past two years has been the "cabaret" entertainments at restaurants and hotels. A dispatch from New York indicates that the proprietors are finding them too costly and would like to "chuck" them. Also the theaters are feeling the competition.

Judging from the generous space taken by advertising these resorts in the newspapers, they must have attracted a big business.

As a form of public entertainment they have seemed Frenchy rather than American. They appear suited to the atmosphere of "Gas Paro," where the favorite entertainment is not drama or athletics, but sitting in the open-air boulevard restaurants and watching the styles go by.

The appetite of modern society is faded, and it demands its constant novelties and spicy seasoning. Probably the "cabarets" were popular at first because they seemed foreign and French. The public demand is insatiable, and it calls for color and motion and rag time and high kicking. The cabaret entertainments have been no better and no worse than theater performances.

The "cabaret" craze came down among the dining tables. The advertisement of modern American life is because he could kill several birds with one stone, eat, drink and see a vaudeville show at the same time.

For the mass of the people the exotic manners of New York City will not be necessary. Extraneous diversions should not be essential to make a well served meal palatable. If you are with friends, the social converse of the hour should be choice. Otherwise, the luncheon drama played at the tables about you is cabaret enough. Fragments of conversation, the study of faces and observation of types, the speculation as to character and occupations, these alone make any public dining hall full of human interest.

MEAT PRICES THIS SPRING.

Meat dealers in some places are complaining that prices are higher now than they were through the winter and are predicting still higher figures. Wholesale dealers deny any considerable recent advance. But cattle are scarce, and the probable continuance of the war threatens the steady rise of all food products. There is no news in high meat prices, but the problem still worries the housekeeper and the bill payer.

Government reports have much to say about buying cheaper cuts of meat. Many housekeepers say they try to do this, but the markets don't have these cheaper cuts. They may be snapped up as quickly as they come in by thrifty women with market baskets. Or else there is no general demand for them.

Almost any butcher's shop can build up a trade in this line by advertising. There are many people who depend on the butcher's bargain counter. Recent immigrants learned these thrifty ways in their own country, where juicy steak and roast, commonly placed on the American table, were unheard of luxuries.

There is a phrase that "the best is the cheapest." The textile fabric that costs twice as much may wear three times as long. Many people seem to think the idea applies equally to meat. They openly boast that they never buy any but the best cuts. But meat and textiles are different.

The old timers used to know the value of many of the less costly cuts. They would boil and stew patiently, carefully preserving juices and flavors. This is too painstaking for the modern American family, which prefers the hasty cooking of the grill room. But the higher cost material, prepared by an ill trained servant, is often less appetizing than the homely stew pot of the immigrant wife, who has seasoned her humble meal with kitchen lore of old tradition.

Stories From the Theaters of War.

By Frederick White

Berlin. (By Mail).—For the space of a day the Berlin that is known to so many thousands of Americans—the Berlin that is both gay and gala—returned on the first of last month on the occasion of the 100th birthday of Bismarck, the Iron Chancellor.

For the first time in many months hundreds of officers gathered, who were not in the new familiar field gray, but who were instead all the gay trappings of parade uniforms and who, under a brilliant sun-lit sky, made an imposing spectacle as they gathered about the great statue of Bismarck before the Reichstag building.

No event in months has brought together so many of the inhabitants of Greater Berlin. In thousands they gathered about the open space between the Reichstag and the gilded statue of victory that stands perched between the Reichstag and the Spree.

Berlin, like all the other cities of Europe, has by comparison with its former self been somewhat subdued during the last few months. This air vanished completely, however, as thousands of visitors took up the refrain of patriotic songs sung in the old chancellor's honor. Standing bareheaded in the sun-lit, gaily upward, the city was filled with its former self.

"Deutschland, Deutschland, Deutschland," rang out with a little more than the customary vigor as the singer thought of the present times, and the circumstances that Bismarck's centennial should fall in the midst of a war more strenuous than he ever conceived.

Within ten minutes after the ceremony at the statue, Unter den Linden was transformed into the United States of America. In front of the guard house continued out in front prepared to salute the almost numberless generals who walked or rode past in their gorgeous uniforms.

Though Bismarck's birthday was celebrated almost everywhere in Germany, the most important recognition of the centennial was in Berlin, where the ceremonial was led by the imperial chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-

Hollweg, followed by all the generals and admirals not on duty at the front. The president, officers and members of the Reichstag and of the Prussian Diet, city official from Greater Berlin, the grandsons and namesake of the chancellor, Prince Otto von Bismarck, and, to give a unique touch to the affair, the grandson of the Kaiser, the nine-year-old son of the Crown Prince.

Within a few minutes after the arrival of the functionaries the great Bismarck statue was surrounded by great wreaths, the gifts of individuals ranging from the Emperor to minor officials, and from organizations from the Reichstag to the committee for the erection of a national statue to the chancellor.

From every flag pole on the Reichstag building the black, white and red flags fluttered in the breeze, and the square in front was a blaze of color contributed by banners of every sort, and by gay costumes, not only of the military but of students in fencing suits who charged their foils against each other in keeping time to the patriotic songs.

The only suggestion of war allowed to enter the scene were a few remarks of the speakers, the words of some of the songs and the field gray uniforms of an "honor company" that faced the Bismarck statue with presented arms during the proceedings. In all other respects it was the gay and festive Berlin of old.

Over the city has been winning victories in the present war her people have been in the habit of hanging out flags—the three-colored German banner and the state flag of all sorts and descriptions. Not even the victories of the Marston taken however, brought out one half of the banners that the Bismarck celebration did. The business of the city was fairly ablaze with color from them.

A hitherto unsuspected number of pictures—photographs, oil paintings and etchings—of Bismarck suddenly made their appearance in the store windows, often flanked by likenesses of the Kaiser and of the Crown Prince.

VAGRANT VERSE.

LEND A HAND.

The gladsome spring is here again, With bud and flower and bee, And nature, wreathed in sunny smiles, This query bears to me: How can you lend a helping hand, So lavished on the land, Without a yearning in your breast To "lend a helping hand?"

Our streets and avenues so bare, So swept and garnished clean, May blossom with a brave array With your kind aid, I ween.

Big Bridget dump her garnered trash Of papers, rent and torn, To swell these filthy flying clouds That hail each rainy dawn.

Yes! Bid her on the ash barrel pile, As every one well knows, The rubbish scattered far and wide By every wind that blows.

And then stroll forth to greet your work, And know the joys that come To those who make these streets of ours

Deprive a Naples slum.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

FRUIT GROWERS PREPARING FOR BIG CROPS

acre or a quarter section of orchard. Secretary Fred Wenner has long been energetically at work along these lines of a more systematic method and a better grading of the fruit with better prices at the end of the harvest.

The growers are now in sight of a great fruit harvest.

Reliable advices from many sections of the country indicate that Oklahoma will, as usual, be depended on for a large supply, especially of good peaches. If the growers can arrange for better grading, closer inspection and more rigid conforming to the requirements of the fruit handlers in the great markets, the producers can realize better prices. The past few years have been in sad and expensive experiences, largely due to the want of co-operation and better grading and inspection at the packing sheds. These experts are well posted and they are paid a good salary to tell growers just what will have to be done, and just how, in order to realize better prices. Every grower should be present at this meeting.
